

Yen remains under pressure

There was a subdued tone to the action across markets yesterday. This was not overly surprising giving the dearth of top or even second tier data releases. The muted backdrop was evident in most of the main equity indices being in sideways mode for much of their respective trading sessions. This followed a strong performance last week. In Europe, the Euro Stoxx 50 registered a -0.1% daily return. At the closing bell on Wall Street last night, the S&P 500 index was flat on the day.

Meanwhile, on bond markets, the main benchmark sovereign yields experienced only minimal change yesterday. The magnitude of movement was generally in a 1-2bps range. The 10-year US Treasury yield edged back below 4.5%, while the 10-year German Bund traded near to the 2.5% level.

On the currency front, most of the majors were confined to narrow trading ranges. Of the action to register over the past 24 hours, the yen remains on the defensive, while the dollar is modestly weaker versus the euro and sterling.

In level terms, USD/JPY is above ¥156, while EUR/JPY is up in 168-169 territory. EUR/USD has moved modestly higher to trade nearer to the $1.08 threshold. GBP/USD is trading close to the midpoint of $1.25-1.26. EUR/GBP continues to straddle the 86p handle.

Already this morning, we have got a raft of UK labour market data. This included the unemployment rate for Q1 printing at 4.3%, in line with forecasts. Data-wise, the remainder of today's calendar highlights are the German ZEW survey (May) and US PPI inflation (April). Meanwhile, in terms of central bank newsflow, US Fed Chair Powell is due to speak.
